Victorian Psychiatry Training Committee

Dear Applicant,

On behalf of the Victorian Psychiatry Training Committee, thank you for your interest in applying for psychiatric training for the 2025 intake.

Psychiatry is a fascinating and important profession. The mind is complex, as are people's social and cultural interactions, and the brain - the body's most complex organ - whilst far better understood, continues to be an active area of research for many disciplines. Psychiatry offers a particularly broad approach to medical work, taking all aspects of the person and their social setting into mind allows for a range of pathways to subspecialties or general psychiatry. To meet this, the training is broad with a range of skills taught, including assessment skills, and interventions such as the evidence-based use of psychotherapies and psychotropic medication. Psychiatry considers complex issues linked with society, law, philosophy and ethics. Psychiatrists work alongside a lived experience workforce and within multidisciplinary teams in consultation with other professionals. The selection process for psychiatry training aims to determine whether new applicants have the necessary qualities, skills, and experience to become psychiatrists.
